BETHEL GRAMMAR SCHOOL OPERETTA

William Bingham Grammar School again opened its doors on Thursday evening, June 5, to an eager, anticipating audience. The Bethel Grammar School was presenting the operetta, "The Inn of the Golden Cheese".

The costumes were appropriate to that time, nearly two and one half centuries ago.

All the characters; the dear old grandmother in black with white kerchief and cap, the remainder of the Inn family in grey and white, the neighbor children, the passer-by, who warned of unfriendly Indians, brave(?) Periwinkle, who convulsed his audience with his song and final dash to cover, the painted braves, Smiling Eyes, William Penn and his attendants showed much ability and careful, thoughtful training.

Special mention should be made of "Smiling Eyes" the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Aubin, who did her part so perfectly.

The Alphabetical Drill by 26 girls was very cleverly executed. Richard Young pleasingly entertained by singing a solo and encore.

Following is the program:

MRS. JULIA SKILLINGS BEAN

The death of Mrs. Julia Skillings Bean occurred at the home of her son, Herman Skillings at North West Bethel, May 27, after several months' illness caused by a fall last February, which resulted in a broken hip.

Mrs. Bean was a woman of great activity always busy about the home and in spare moments making rugs and knitting as long as able, and to one of her temperaments it was hard to be confined to a life of inactivity.

She was born in Bethel, Feb. 28, 1837, the daughter of Amasa and Sarah Twitchell. Her girlhood days were passed in her native home and she was educated in the public schools of Bethel and Gould Academy. On April 24, 1864 she was united in marriage with William Skillings of Gorham, Me., and three children were born of this union: Edward, Herman and Adelaide, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Skillings began married life in Portland, but later moved to Worcester, Mass., where they lived for several years, then moved to Harvard, Mass., where they lived at the time of Mr. Skillings' death.

On October 9, 1889 she married Spencer Bean of Bethel, who died many years ago. Mrs. Bean still continued to live on in the home at Harvard, Mass., until falling health made it unsafe for her to live alone and she came to the home of her son Herman in Bethel, where everything possible was done for her comfort and willing hands ministering to her needs in her declining years.

She is survived by two sons, Edward of Lewiston, Herman of Bethel, one brother, Irving Bean of Freeport, three granddaughters, one grandson, besides four great granddaughters and two great grandsons.

Funeral services were held at the home of her son Herman Skillings at North West Bethel, Friday at 2 P. M. A Christian Science service was held with Mrs. Wallace Clark as leader. The lodge was taken to Harvard, Mass., Saturday where burial took place.

All farewells are God's appointments. Separations strengthen ties; those increases in our partings, And God blesses those farewells!

BETHEL FARM BUREAU LADIES

NOTICE

Republican Voters of Oxford County

There are three reasons why I am a candidate for County Commissioner of Oxford County:

1st: My long service as 1st Selectman and Road Commissioner of the Town of Bethel, also my two terms at the State Legislature makes me feel sure that the experience thus gained will count for efficiency as County Commissioner.

2nd: Oxford County is a large County and it would seem that one term of six years ought to satisfy the average office holder.

3rd: To my mind there should be a fair distribution of the County offices.

IS THERE NOW?

Voters of Oxford County think this over and any help you can give me at the June Primaries will be greatly appreciated.

Wanted Everything

"Dad, I want a five spot I just have to go To see 'Hot Sinners'— It's the year's best show. The gang's all goin' And they'll think I'm a dud If I miss 'Hot Sinners'— Thanks, Dad, I knew you would!"

That's the Son and Heir, folks, And this is Daughter Dear: "Ma, I need a new dress! This one's lookin' queer. Ma, I need some money, Ma, I have to go! Ma, I've got to hurry and I hate dishwashin' so!"

Sure, we ought to scold 'em, But no, we hold our tongue; That's the way we acted When we were just as young!

one writer suggests, the picture is reminiscent of the famous line, "I could not love thee, dear, so much, loved I not honor more."

Hint for the Home
Women may lead in literature, divorce, glass blowing, fat girls, etc., but there is still one province where man remains supreme.

When I got home last night Mrs. B. was sitting about 30 degrees to the starboard and complaining of severe pains in her left side.

After much coaxing I got her to tell me what the trouble was. She said she had carried in a bucket of coal.

I lit her good. I was furious. I told her never to let me hear of her carrying in another single bucket of coal as long as she lived.

Her lips quivered and I thought that perhaps I had gone too far.

Then I told her that if she wanted to carry in the coal it was all right with me, but I wanted her to carry two buckets at a time in the future. I don't want no legless wife.—Spokane Spokesman Review.

Forces in Expression
The expression, "An unlicked cub," is a strong, homely reference to a person who is crude, unpolished and undeveloped, who must literally be licked into shape by the attrition of life's experiences.

The metaphor is one we have borrowed from the world of zoology. It is an allusion to the practice of the mother bear, who actually seems to be constantly licking her cubs.

While, of course, the cub is not in reality licked into shape, still, an unlicked cub is such a bedraggled looking spectacle as compared with one who is, that the unlicked cub has come to take on the significance it has today, of something unfinished and uncouth.—Kansas City Star.

One's "Birthday"
The word birthday designates primarily the day of one's birth. Colloquially, the term is used to designate subsequent anniversaries of that day. Dictionaries emphasize this use, defining the day as, "the day of one's birth or its anniversary." An anniversary is defined as, "a commemorative observance or celebration of an event separated by one year, or by an exact number of years from some past event." On one's first anniversary, one is one year old but celebrates what is colloquially accepted as one's second birthday, but one's first birthday anniversary.—Literary Digest.

Caesar's Profound Rebuke
The following quotation is from "Pitarch's Lives": "Caesar once, seeing some wealthy strangers at Rome carrying up and down with them in their arms and bosoms young puppy dogs and monkeys, embracing and making much of them, took occasion, not unreasonably, to ask whether the women in their country were not used to bear children: by that prince-like reprimand graciously reflecting upon persons who spend and lavish upon brute beasts that affection and kindness which nature has implanted in us to be bestowed on those of our own kind."

Subject of Famous Painting
Briefly, the explanation of the famous painting called "The Huguenot" is as follows: By order of the Duc de Guise, issued before St. Bartholomew's day, "all good Catholics" were enjoined to wear a white scarf as a distinguishing badge. The young woman pleads with her lover as she strives to fasten the symbolic white scarf. The lover will die in the morning. An

The Olive Branch

THEY had been having a lovers' quarrel. I have not the faintest idea what it was about—they were not very clear on that point themselves when they came to think it over the next morning. But whatever it was they quarreled about, it sufficed and, as they parted in anger, Ruth announced to John that she would never speak to him again. Whereupon John had replied: "And I, Miss Walton, hereafter will refrain from addressing you."

Before John Carstairs reached home he began to be sorry, and by the time he reached home he was very sorry indeed. Above all things in the world he longed for a reconciliation, but, because of his obstinacy, resolved that he would not be the first to make advances. And the door had scarcely closed upon John when Ruth was seized with an impulse to call him back. But there was just a trifle of obstinacy in the makeup of Ruth, too; and she repressed her impulse. She longed for a reconciliation, but John must make the first overtures for peace.

But neither of them did write penitential letters. That afternoon they met in the street; but Ruth was bearing no olive branch in her hand as they approached each other, and neither was John. They passed without speaking.

Figure as they would they could neither of them hit upon a plan of reconciliation which would not involve some loss of "face." So things went along for a while, miserable week. Then fate threw them together in a most embarrassing manner. Ruth had a little runabout which she used to drive herself; and John had a roadster which he drove. It was just about dusk. Ruth had been down to the village and had volunteered to bring up from the grocer's some supplies which were needed for the house. Halfway home—just at the point where there was no house nearer than a couple of miles—her engine went wrong and her machine came to a stop.

She got out to see what was the matter and a working man on his way home came along and volunteered assistance. While the man tinkered with the engine and Ruth stood by offering more or less valuable suggestions along came John in his machine on his way home from the city. Sighting a craft in distress, he hove to and joined the party. He saw that it was Ruth who was stranded—it was still light enough to recognize her and her car at a considerable distance. But, unreasonable and unjust as Ruth had been, he could not, as a gentleman, refuse his aid to a lady in difficulties. He would repair her car for her, if he could; it was not necessary that he should speak to her during the operation.

"What's the matter?" inquired John of the tinkering laborer, not even looking at Ruth. The man told him, and together they discussed the situation. Ruth standing silently by biting her lips. "It's no use; the car will have to be towed to a garage," said the man.

"Yes, I think you are right," replied John. "As soon as I reach the village I will send out and have it brought in. Will you ask this lady if she will allow me to take her to her home first?"

"The gent wants to know if he can give you a lift home, miss," said the man.

"Tell the gentleman that he may," replied Ruth. "And hand me my bundles out of my car, if you please." The man started to obey; but John was before him. He began to take the bundles out but instead of handing them to Ruth he placed them, without a word, in his own car.

Another car had now come along and stopped to see what the matter was. Its headlights were turned on and made the little spot around Ruth's stranded machine as light as day. John was taking out the last of Ruth's spoils from the groceryman when his wrapping paper slipped off and he saw that he held in his hand a good-sized bottle on which was a gaudy label, reading: "Olives, Brauch & Co., makers." His eyes twinkled. He was not entirely without a sense of humor, and instead of putting the bottle in his machine along with the other bundles he handed it direct to Ruth—handed it in such a manner that she could hardly help but observe that label. She looked at it for a second or two. "Olives," "Brauch & Co."—and then smiled. He was handing her the olive branch!

Holding the bottle in her hand, she hopped into John's machine. John quickly followed her and off they drove. There was an embarrassing silence for a few moments after John started his car. Ruth somehow got the cork out of the bottle of olives and began eating them. Then John said: "By the way, Ruth, I find that you were quite right about that matter we were discussing the other night."

"How nice of you to say so," replied Ruth. "Let me see—we were discussing—"

"Why about—er—"

"Oh, hang it all! Never mind what it was about. The question is, are you going to let me take you to the Eldridge's dance Tuesday?"

"Why, of course, John," said Ruth. "Have an olive."

Millions of Hours Lost by Disabling Illnesses

On an average, each person in the country has at least one disabling illness every year, the committee on the "cost of medical care" has reported after a survey of various sickness reports compiled by the United States public health service and other organizations.

Men have a disabling sickness about once a year, women about twice and children over twice during the school year. Colds, bronchitis, grippe, influenza and pneumonia are oftenest the cause of these disabling illnesses and cause the longest disability. On the same basis of the number of cases and total time lost, digestive disorders and diseases also take a high place.

About 130,000,000 cases of disabling illnesses occur in the United States each year. Adding nondisabling illnesses more than doubles the figure, the committee reported. The 38,000,000 wage earners in the country lose at least 250,000,000 work days a year, and the 24,000,000 school children lose 170,000,000 school days a year. These figures account for only one-half of the total population.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Early Postal Records Destroyed by Flames

The first 60 years of American postal history are almost a complete blank because of the great fire of 1830, which destroyed the Post Office building at Washington and with it almost every vestige of postal records. Years later a postmaster general was forced to admit to congress that he was unable to supply the names of assistant postmasters general who had served from the beginning of the system.

One volume alone was saved from the flames by a youthful messenger in the office of the auditor of the treasury for the Post Office department. This book, still in existence and now under control of the chief clerk of the Post Office department, is a ledger of postal revenues for the years 1770, 1777 and 1778. So far as is known, no other postal records of the early years are in existence.—Detroit News.

Pepper Production

Black and white pepper comes from southern India, Sumatra, Java, Ceylon, Siam, Borneo, Penang and other parts of the Malay peninsula. Black pepper consists of the dried immature berries of a perennial climbing shrub called Piper Mifrum, native to the forests of western and southern India. White pepper is practically the same product as black pepper except that the outer shell of the berry is removed to a greater or less extent by friction following soaking in water. Red pepper is the powdered ripe pod, both flesh and seeds of any variety of capsicum, the plant which gives us the edible fresh pepper, but which bears no relation to the true pepper plant. Cayenne pepper is, by ruling of the board of food and drug inspection of 1900, distinguished from red pepper as being obtained only from small-fruited varieties of capsicum.

Tiger China's King of Beasts

To the Chinese the tiger, not the lion, is the king of beasts. From childhood they are taught to fear the tiger, and he is made the bugaboo to frighten youngsters. If they are naughty they are told that the "huan" (tiger) will catch them. Paper tigers are pasted over doors in China, so that the evil spirits, seeing the beast, will flee away.

The Chinese have great faith in tiger bones, claws and sinews as medicine. Since the tiger is so strong, they say, medicine made of him must make one strong. Travelling medicine men with tiger skins stretched on their poles as signboards rarely wait long for purchasers of their wares.—New York Times.

Franklin's Precocity

It was in 1772 that Benjamin Franklin tried his hand at journalism for the first time, writes Nathan G. Goodman in the Baltimore Sun. Without their being identified he slipped articles in to the Courant under the name of "Mrs. Silence Dogood." Parading behind the mask of a shrewd middle-aged widow this sixteen-year-old boy carried on a moral and intellectual crusade, including an attack on "school larks" at Harvard college. Although Franklin knew how to mix blunt, amusing observations in serious discussions without falling into burlesque, and he avoided bitterness.

Old, But Apt Phrase

Few phrases are more apt than "All his eggs are in one basket," which has come down to us through more than 300 years, and which we understand to be practically synonymous with the line "to be prone to exaggerate."

Like so many other idioms now a solid part of our daily conversation, this one was originally found in a book now considered a classic.

It was first used in none other than the famous "Anatomy of Melancholy," by Robert Burton, over three centuries ago.—Kansas City Times.

How to Live Long

The trouble with the rules for longevity suggested by centenarians is that they are contradictory. Their habits of life differ. All they seem to have in common are sound constitutions and a good deal of luck.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

TIMELY SPRAYING IS MOST IMPORTANT

If to present cool, rainy weather conditions continue so as to prolong the blossoming period very much there will be considerable danger of scab infection during that period.

Under these conditions it would seem advisable to put on an application of plain Lime sulphur Spray or Sulphur Dust, between now and the Calyx Application. Scab develops in cool damp weather.

Each man must use his own judgment of course, and should consider the time that his last application was made. If this is put on during bloom, lead should not be used as it will poison the bees and any other insects. Do not think that an application at this time will do away with the Calyx Spray, however, for it is then that the Codling Moth and Curculion are controlled.

Nicotene can be used in the special application if Aphids are present. Timeliness never can be substituted by thoroughness during these first applications including the Calyx. Many are influenced in their spray program by the fact that scab development has not "shown up" yet. By the time scab shows up it is too late to do much except kick about it. Get the habit of watching the weather and follow a complete spray schedule.

REAL ACCIDENT PREVENTION NEEDED

The automobile accident record continues its upward trend. So important has this problem become that President Hoover recently called another conference to consider means for reducing fatalities.

One thing, at least, is clear—the methods of the past have failed. Compulsory insurance, heralded at the long awaited panacea, has not decreased accidents. Traffic laws in most states are outmoded or are inadequately enforced. Traffic congestion on streets and highways grows steadily more severe.

An authority on safety says that the most important single step is the licensing law for drivers. Thousands of automobiles are being operated by incompetent or reckless persons, all of whom are potential killers and destroyers of property.

Defective cars, turning in the middle of the road, cutting in, passing on curves, failure to give turning signals, etc., are leading causes of accidents. Every state should have a driver's license law and a modernized, rigidly enforced traffic code.

"MUTT AND JEFF"

The latest edition of the world famous cartoon series, "Mutt and Jeff", by Bud Fisher, of the New York American Journal artists, is announced as the attraction for Odeon Hall, Bethel, for one evening performance only, Tuesday night, June 10th.

Like the cartoons that appear in the newspapers every Sunday and week day throughout the entire year the stage play is absolutely and entirely new each season, nothing left over from the preceding one excepting the perennial favorites Mutt and Jeff, names that have become famous throughout the entire civilized world. From the United States to far away China and South Africa it is just as well known as it is right here in the land of its birth and in Canada. With a strong cast of excellent performers supported by a group of unusually pretty girls possessing the necessary "pep" to please not only the blasé theatre goer, but the entire family from baby to Granddaddy its popularity grows rather than diminishes as the years go by.

Not since the original Barnum Circus was in its prime has an attraction been so earnestly desired and expectantly looked for as "Mutt and Jeff" on their yearly rambles. Capacity business greets this wonderful attraction at nearly every stand, pleasing crowds and still greater crowds that were unable to gain admission to the theatre. It is now in its seventeenth consecutive season, the oldest and most popular attraction touring the country and it is doing the biggest business in its history. From the scenic and electrical equipment to the smallest detail of the production it is superior, in every way, to anything ever offered, in this particular field of amusement, for public approval.

Graphic Outlines of History

DANIEL BOONE

As an early pioneer, and hunter he was one of the first to explore the forests of Kentucky. He erected a fort in that vicinity after several people had settled there. At one time he gave a warning that saved Kentucky when the British governor of Detroit was planning to wipe out the settlement. His policy for wilderness traveling was—"Be sure you're right, then go ahead." Thoughtful consideration and attention to details which is comforting in such circumstances, is afforded in our service.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

London Naval Treaty Will Be Dealt With by Senate in Special Session.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

RATIFICATION or rejection of the London naval treaty will be accomplished by the senate in a special session, to be called by President Hoover immediately after the adjournment of congress about June 15. This was the plan decided upon by majority leaders of the senate and house with the approval of the President. It was considered best for congress to go ahead with the business before it, complete that and adjourn before taking up the treaty. The house leaders said they were ready to set a date for ending the session as soon as the senate was prepared for such a step. Opposition to hasty action on the treaty, by opponents of the pact, and a desire on the part of members of the house to get through and go home were two of the major reasons for this decision. President Hoover's announcement that he intended to call a special session, if necessary, to insure early action on the treaty was a principal factor.

Senators Johnson of California and Hale of Maine, leaders of the opposition, were especially vehement in their objections to what they called an attempt to railroad the pact through the senate by administration senators. Under the program adopted, the tariff, rivers and harbors, omnibus and veterans bills will be acted on in the senate before a recess adjourns.

More members of the navy general board and other high officers of the navy appeared before the senate committee on foreign relations and naval affairs to discuss the treaty. The committee will report on the treaty before the adjournment of the senate. The committee will report on the treaty before the adjournment of the senate.

forcement bureau. Senator Sheppard of Texas, for instance, urged the early enactment of legislation to make the liquor buyer punishable under the dry laws. Sheppard was co-author of the Eighteenth amendment. Early in the present session he introduced a bill to make the seller and purchaser of illicit liquor equally liable to punishment. Senator Jones of Washington, author of the "five and ten law," and others opposed the views of Sheppard.

The court in an important test case brought by the government, held that congress not only "deliberately and designly" exempted purchasers in the Volstead act, but for ten years "has significantly left the law in its original form."

Enforcement bureau officials pointed out that the decision was entirely in accord with the policy the bureau had followed.

THREE bills intended to improve prohibition enforcement, principally through the relief of congested federal court dockets, were given the approval of the house judiciary committee. One measure would authorize the summary prosecution of offenses, elsewhere defined as misdemeanors, before United States commissioners without a jury. Whatever the action of the commissioner, it must be confirmed or disapproved by a member of the federal bench.

Another would amend the United States code to define a misdemeanor as an offense carrying for a maximum penalty of six months in jail, a fine of $500, or both, and a felony as an offense punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year.

The third measure would amend the house law to define a misdemeanor under the prohibition laws as an offense committed by one who is not an authorized holder of the dry statutes and a person involving not more than one gallon of liquor.

On June 3 a federal grand jury at Seattle indicted a group of five prohibition violators for carrying on a business in the city. The indictment was returned by the grand jury at Seattle. The indictment was returned by the grand jury at Seattle.

coolies when laborers were imported to break a strike of dock workers, and the troops were forced to fire on the mobs. Many were killed and the wounded numbered perhaps a thousand. Latest reports indicated that peace had not yet been restored there. Fifteen Indian coolie women were said to have been tortured and massacred by coolies. All the shops in the city were closed and the food situation was becoming desperate.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI recently delivered several addresses so fiery and provocative concerning the necessity of having Italy prepared for war that the negotiations between that country and France for a naval limitation agreement were broken off, at least temporarily. Some of the French newspapers even hint at the possibility of war between France and Italy, though the conciliatory attitude of the French government is stressed.

On the other hand, Deputy Gray in a speech before the Italian chamber of deputies, appealed to France to make an accord with Italy so that Europe may present a united front against America in the future armistice struggle which he is certain will come.

CHINESE Nationalist forces in Hunan province are reported to have been severely defeated by the troops of the northern alliance commanded by Yen Hsi-shan and Feng Yuh-shan and numbering about 200,000 men. The government troops were forced to dig in and suspend their advance on Chengchow, the rebel base, until reinforcements arrive. The two armies have been engaged in battle along the railway south of the Yellow river since May 8.

ORGANIZED labor won a big victory when the Supreme Court of the United States upheld a ban on interstate railroad strikes. The court ruled that the National Labor Relations act, which forbids strikes by interstate carriers, is constitutional.

DETERMINED to hold down the cost of living, congress has passed a law which will limit the amount of money that can be paid for a bill of exchange. The law will limit the amount of money that can be paid for a bill of exchange.

Several well known men and women were taken by death during the week. Among them were Cardinal Lush, the venerable archbishop of Reims who remained in that city throughout its bombardment in the world war. Mrs. Katherine Keith Adler of Chicago, popular novelist, who was killed in an automobile accident in France. Lord Randall Thomas Davidson, former archbishop of Canterbury. David M. Lord of New York, veteran advertising man, and Francis Ashton, the richest man in England.

Rowe Hill, Greenwood

Mrs. Mary Cummings of Boston, Mass., was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Newton Bryant a few days last week. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bryant of Woodfords and Mr. Fred Blake of Portland were week end guests at Newton Bryant's.

The remains of Melroy Cummings were brought here and interred in Bryant-Cummings' family cemetery, last Saturday. Mr. Cummings returned to his work in Punta Gorda, Fla., last November after spending the summer among relatives in Maine. His health failed and doctors there advised him to come north. He was taken suddenly with acute indigestion while on shipboard and died before landing in New York. He leaves five children, Vern, Winnie, Katie, Willis and Leroy, who were all able to attend the funeral which was at West Paris; he also leaves three brothers, Dana, Rinaldo, and Arthur. Mr. Cummings was sixty-nine years old.

Among the callers at Elton Dunham's, Sunday, were Henry Morgan and family, Clyde Dunham and family, Theodore Dunham and family, Locke Mills. Mrs. Lester Cole and children, Greenwood Center and Eugene Cummings and family, Livermore.

Mrs. Mabel Dunham visited her brother, Roy Morgan and family, one day recently.

Carolyn Towle gave an entertainment at the school house last Wednesday evening, followed by a social. Sandwiches, cold drinks and candy were on sale.

School keeps two weeks longer.
